THEY WERE OPEN.

Unlike the society of mischief-makers, pseudo patriots and two-bit exploiters, the meetings of the American Federation of Catholic Societies were open at all times and politics were unheard of. No resolutions endorsing Hughes were passed, as some outsiders assume, nor was the watchful waiting theory condemned with its author, and with impunity.

NATIONAL BULWARK.

Any system of education which overlooks the religious training of the young, no matter how perfect in other respects, suffers from a radical defect. The parochial school makes no such mistake. Within its limits it gives its pupils the answers to the problems they will be called upon to solve. It trains its children for the battle of life, it remembers their eternal destiny and prepares them for their position as citizens of the great country where the Providence of God has cast their lot. The formation of the man, the Christian, the citizen, is the ideal it has in view. Intellectual, religious, civic preparedness, this is its watchword. And it is because it thus rounds the pupil for his tasks, duties, responsibilities and rights that we claim for it a position of honor among our educational forces. Not every thing is perfect in the actual working of the system. Is there any chain of schools, any organization for the training of youth where shortcomings must not be recorded? But the system as a whole is sound. Owing to the religious training which it gives, it does a work of national importance, one which the nation has been too slow to recognize.

LITTLE CHEER.

We decline to trespass on a question which has been granted respite of late, says the Southern Guardian, but if anyone thought that Mr. Hughes, the Republican candidate for President, would take up the Catholic grievance in Mexico, his two speeches already delivered hold out slight hope in that direction. The notification reply, spoken immediately after the nomination, reminded all and sundry that the brand of Americanism he preached would not tolerate race or creed interference. The speech delivered in New York, on the occasion of his acceptance of the nomination in formal manner, dwelt long upon the troubles of our Southern neighbor, but the Catholic would look in vain for even the most remote allusion to any consciousness on the orator's part that he knew representatives of our faith had been maltreated. In any event he knows nothing of any crime except those committed against Americans. To such maltreatment he did allude, and if any of our faithful are included in the number then to them he promised—well just what he promised it would be hard to say, since he spoke in most general terms.

RESENTMENT INCREASING.

An article which appeared originally in the Manchester Guardian has been given wide circulation in the American and Irish press. That suspicion of England's policies, together with deep resentment of England's blunders or worse, is daily growing in the United States, says the Guardian, can not be denied. Nor can it be quietly ignored, for if any lasting peace is to be secured through an international league of the Powers the sympathetic co-operation of the United States is absolutely necessary. At the outset of the war the balance of public favor inclined, thinks the writer, to the cause of the Allies. "That sympathy was asserted," and for the loss, the British orders-in-council, many of which betrayed a lamentable want of statesmanship, are largely responsible. With them came the censorship, the arbitrary blacklist, the annoying and damaging interference with neutral mails, which in no wise tended to soothe the soreness occasioned by earlier blunders. Yet "these matters are comparatively unimportant in days such as these," continues the Manchester critic. "If there were nothing else to be considered we would be justified in believing that there was no reason for a serious change in Anglo-American relations." In the writer's opinion

'above all other influences working against us in America is the memory of the Irish revolt.' For that unfortunate "lapse of statesmanship, when the Cabinet forgot its first impulse towards clemency, there would seem to be no hope of a speedy remedy." England's policy towards Ireland, especially as expressed in "the reign of Sir John Maxwell at Dublin," is responsible for the change from the earlier sympathy, a change that is likely to last "until the end of the war, or until such time as a complete change can be brought about in our Irish policy."

SATISFACTORY.

The acceptance by the trainmen of the Adamson eight-hour bill and the intent of Congress and the Senate to pass that bill today should avert the threatened disaster of the great railroad strike. For which the American people will be duly grateful, and say what you may, the result is a tribute to President Wilson's efforts.

BETTER RESULTS HOPED.

The public at large and tobacco men are pleased with the efforts of Senators James, Beckham and the delegation of Congressmen who are planning to adopt methods of retaliation for the latest outrage of Great Britain in placing an embargo on tobacco to even neutral countries. It is hoped that the interests of the Kentucky Senators will be livelier than in the Roger Casement resolution for clemency, for which neither voted, and although passed was not sent to London until after Casement was hanged.

The Socialists are against preparedness and national defense. Their doctrine is that the workers have no country to lose, no country to defend. Combatting the Socialists and their anarchistic principles furnishes a sphere for the Junior Order and Guardians of Liberty, who then might do better than they have thus far attempted.

Recreation centers for youth have possibilities that are almost limitless. They develop action, joy and life and lead to high and great things.

Eight hours pay, eight hours sleep and eight hours play, the proper solution, strike or no strike.

Keep busy with your own affairs and you will have little time to bother with the affairs of others.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

Tuesday night at St. Martin's Hall the St. Martin's Bruderbund celebrated the forty-fourth anniversary with the largest and happiest gathering in its history. Capt. Oscar Miller presided as toastmaster, and in welcoming the members and their friends stated that they were there for an evening of pleasure and invited those not members to become affiliated. After the reading of a congratulatory message from Rev. Father Berresheim, conveying his blessing, President Henry Hell spoke on brotherhood and the improvements and benefits derived therefrom. While paying benefits for twenty-six weeks of the year, $200 on the death of a member and $100 on the death of a member, there still remained $7,000 in the treasury. A number of choice selections were rendered by the Holy Trinity Choral Society, a musical organization unsurpassed by any in the city. Short addresses were also made by the editor of the Kentucky Irish American and Henry Frenke. A pleasing incident was the presentation of a handsome gold badge to John Dornbusch, who has completed his twenty-five years as a member. There were frequent recesses while cigars, eatables and refreshments were served in abundance.

SERVICE AMONG INDIANS.

BE AN OPTIMIST.

Brother Isidore, Provincial of the Xavierian order in the United States, was the guest of the local Alumni of St. Xavier's College at a banquet given at the Seelbach on Tuesday night in honor of his golden jubilee. Robert A. Watson was toastmaster and responses were made by the Rev. Brother James, whose toast was "A Son of Xavier," and Thomas D. Clines as representative of the Alumni. Other speakers were Fred Harris, Rev. John T. Hill, R. A. Schumann, William G. Hume, William P. McDonough and Thomas Hines. Many of the old students of Brother Isidore were present, and many incidents of the first school on Fourth street were related and enjoyed by all present. A purse of gold was presented the jubilarian and the evening was closed with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne." During the afternoon Brother Isidore and Brother Boniface, of Baltimore, who celebrated his golden jubilee a short time ago, were taken on an automobile tour of the city, and were entertained at the country home of M. J. Bannon at Beechmont and also at the residence of Leo Schumann on the Third-street boulevard.
